System approach for initial procurement, and how to integrate this into future airport procurement practices. Airports, as well as other governmental entities, usually are required to take the lowest bid when procuring assets. This approach tends not to take into consideration the life-cycle costs, such as the operation and maintenance (O & M) costs, which can result in higher than anticipated costs from the O & M budget. Since the purchase of assets is allocated from capital funds that are managed by a person typically different than the person responsible for the day-to-day management of O & M funds, there can be a disconnect on what is considered "better" when considering two bids. Taking a life-
